THE MAGIC OF TELEMANN

March 14 + 16, 2021

HANDEL+HAYDN SOCIETY
According to Georg Philipp Telemann, a composer should not write music mechanically, (“as if taking goods to the market”), but must discover the sound possibilities of each instrument. Telemann went on to say that this will please the performer and composer; however, that pleasure extends to the listener as well. The works on today’s program show Telemann to be true to his word; moreover, the same can be said for the Violin Sonata in E Minor by his friend and violin virtuoso, Johann Georg Pisendel.

Violin Sonata in E Minor, JunP IV.1
Johann Georg Pisendel (1687-1755)

Known as the best German violinist of his day, Johann Pisendel’s early musical training and career path emulated that of other early 18th-century musicians: by the age of ten, Pisendel was singing in a court chapel (Ansbach) and his musical talent soon emerged in other areas (violin). He studied violin with the Italian virtuoso Giuseppe Torelli, who was working at the Ansbach court. In 1709, Pisendel met J.S. Bach in Weimar while on his way to Leipzig, where he also met Telemann. Pisendel studied at the Leipzig University, but ultimately devoted his time to mastering his instrument. His success in this was marked by numerous performances and a job offer in Darmstadt, which he declined.

In 1712, Pisendel accepted an offer with the prestigious Dresden court. (Telemann was offered and declined a position at the Dresden court a year earlier.) Initially hired as a violinist, Pisendel was named Konzertmeister (first violinist and leader of the orchestra) in 1730. He traveled extensively with the court, including a nine-month stay in Venice where he met and befriended Antonio Vivaldi. One account of Vivaldi’s regard for the virtuoso explains that while out walking together Vivaldi suddenly guided Pisendel to his house because he noticed they were being followed. Vivaldi asked his friend if he had done anything to arouse the suspicion of the city authorities. When Pisendel said no, Vivaldi investigated further and discovered that Pisendel happened to look similar to someone the authorities were investigating.

On all of his travels, Pisendel collected scores to take back to Dresden. From Vivaldi, he received the manuscripts and subsequent dedications for five sonatas and six concertos. Other composers dedicated works to him as well, including Telemann, who wrote a violin concerto for Pisendel when the composer was visiting Dresden in 1719. Although he wrote only a few pieces, Pisendel’s contemporaries regarded his compositions as highly as his playing; his solo violin sonata is believed to have influenced J.S. Bach’s own music for unaccompanied violin.

Pisendel’s Violin Sonata in E Minor shows his masterful technique as a composer as well as a performer. Unified by key, each movement is finely crafted, with dexterous lines for the violin that sometimes converse with the accompaniment, as in the opening Largo, or take flight from it, as in the final movement, a whirlwind Scherzando. One particularly interesting technique is how Pisendel draws out the end of a movement. Just when we feel the movement is concluding, Pisendel inserts one more burst of musical energy before the actual conclusion is heard.
With his father’s death when Telemann was only four years old, his mother worked to ensure that both her sons received a firm educational foundation. Georg Philipp attended a school where courses in Latin and Greek fostered a life-long pursuit of writing, literature, and poetry. Telemann’s interest in music began with singing lessons (and two weeks of organ lessons) when he was ten years old. He then taught himself recorder, violin, and zither and soon began studying composition by copying out the music of other composers before trying to write his own, including an opera when he was 12. In an attempt to discourage his musical activities, Telemann was, about this same time, sent to a different school. The result was not what his mother had hoped; the superintendent of the new school introduced Telemann to studies in math and music, all while he continued to compose.

Telemann continued his studies at the Gymnasium Andreanum, a prominent school in Hildesheim where he graduated third in his class. He also composed for the school, learned more instruments, and traveled, which introduced him to the latest styles of composition.

In 1701, Telemann went to the University of Leipzig to study law. Later in his life, he offered two different reasons for the move. In his first autobiography (1718), he said he went to the university to please his mother. In his 1740 autobiography, however, he said enrolled because he wanted a university education. No matter the reason, Telemann’s musical interests soon overshadowed everything else. A performance of his composition at St. Thomas’s Church led to a commission to write more church music. Soon after, Telemann founded the Leipzig Collegium Musicum, a group later led by Bach, and was made music director of Leipzig’s opera house. After leaving Leipzig four years later, Telemann took a series of other posts, including Konzertmeister at the Saxe-Eisenach court in 1708. It seems likely that he met J.S. Bach during this time and by 1714, when Telemann stood as godfather for C.P.E. Bach, the two were certainly friends.

In 1721, Telemann was named cantor of Johanneum Lateinschule and director musicus in Hamburg and, although he held this post for the rest of his life, there was a point when he considered returning to Leipzig. When a position at St. Thomas’s became available in 1722, Telemann applied and was the unanimous choice of the selection committee. After some back and forth with his employers in Hamburg, the result of which was greater job security and more money, Telemann turned down the Leipzig position, which would eventually be offered to J.S. Bach.

Telemann began publishing his music in 1715 and continued issuing his music throughout his long career. He also published poetry, including works on the deaths of J.S. Bach (1750) and Johann Pisendel (1755). His most prolific period of publication was from 1725-1740, when he issued some 43 first editions of his works, acting as his own engraver and agent for all but one of them. He ensured further control of his own publications by working directly with agents in major cities, such as London, Berlin, Leipzig, Amsterdam, and Dresden, where Pisendel may have been Telemann’s agent. Despite these efforts, Telemann’s music was still pirated.

Unauthorized editions of his music being issued in Paris may be one reason why the composer decided to accept an invitation to visit that city in 1737.

Before leaving on that trip, Telemann published a collection for solo violin. The four-movement Fantasia for Solo Violin in E-flat Major is the fifth of this set of twelve pieces. The title suggests a freedom associated with improvisation; however, each work is carefully composed to highlight the flexibility of the violin and the virtuosity of the performer. As with other works for an instrument generally associated with playing a single line of music, Telemann invokes chords by asking the violinist to alternate between low and high ranges and play two and three notes simultaneously (double and triple stops).

Soon after arriving in Paris, Telemann secured the right to publish his works there for the next 20 years, including the Canonic Sonata No. 1 in G Major, part of a larger collection of canons titled XIX Canons mélodieux. In its simplest manifestation, a canon, or round, creates a multi-textured composition from a single melodic idea. Knowing when subsequent parts enter is one aspect of performing a canon, as is determining when and how to end a piece that can, theoretically, go on ad infinitum. Each of the four movements of Telemann’s sonata for unspecified instruments is a canon built on a single melody; in fact, there is only one line of music in the score. The melodies are complex and extended; for example, the melody of the first movement is 34 measure long. For each movement, Telemann indicates when the second part should enter and how the movement should conclude. The variety of sounds that emerge may cause us to forget that both violin and flute are playing the same notes with just a short time interval separating them.

With the Paris Quartet No. 1 in G Major, from the collection entitled Nouveaux quatuors and published about the same time as the Canonic Sonatas, Telemann synthesizes the various styles of composition prevalent in his day. Scored for flute, violin, viola da gamba or cello and basso continuo, the Quartet in G Major begins with a Grave/Allegro pairing and then proceeds to a series of character pieces or movements designed to evoke a particular mood. These are often inspired by dances, following the French style of composition.

An article in The Boston Weekly News-Letter announces “a Concert of Music on sundry Instruments at Mr. Pelhams’ great Room” on December 30, believed to be the one of the first chamber music concerts in Boston.

Olaudah Equiano is born around this time in present-day Nigeria. Enslaved as a child, Equiano purchases his freedom in 1766. Nine editions of his influential autobiography, The Interesting Narrative of the Life of Olaudah Equiano (1789), are published in England. The book was also published in the United States and translated into Russian, Dutch, and German.

Louis XV of France purchases a clock designed to record the date in any year up to 9999 CE. Built three years earlier by the well-known clock-maker Monsieur Passemont, the millennium clock has more than a thousand interconnecting wheels, including a single wheel that adjusts the date for the leap year. The clock still stands in Versailles and is wound once a month.

Brazilian composer José Maurício Nunes Garcia is born in Rio de Janeiro. A priest and Master of the Royal Chapel for John IV of Portugal, Nunes Garcia composed hundreds of pieces and a book on harmony and counterpoint.

From ancient instruments to modern ones, flutes come in many shapes and sizes. But all share one common characteristic: sound is produced when air, controlled by the player’s lips, passes over an opening and through a tube.

Flutes in the 18th century were made of wood and designed to maximize flexibility as well as dynamic nuance. Sometimes referred to as traversi to distinguish them from recorders, these instruments often had only one or two keys to extend the range of the instrument.

With a sound often described as “sweet,” the flute was a popular instrument in the 18th century. In Telemann’s Paris Quartet No. 1 in G Major, the flute blends and balances with the strings and in the Canonc Sonata No. 1 in G Major, it enriches the interchange with the violin.

ABOUT THE HANDEL AND HAYDN SOCIETY

Boston's Handel and Haydn Society performs Baroque and Classical music with a freshness, a vitality, and a creativity that inspires all ages. H+H has been captivating audiences for 206 consecutive seasons (the most of any performing arts organization in the United States) speaking to its success at converting new audiences to this extraordinary music, generation after generation.

H+H performed the “Hallelujah” chorus from Handel's Messiah in its first concert in 1815, gave the American premiere in 1818, and ever since has been both a musical and a civic leader in the Boston community. During the Civil War, H+H gave numerous concerts in support of the Union Army (H+H member Julia Ward Howe wrote “The Battle Hymn of the Republic”) and on January 1, 1863, H+H performed at the Grand Jubilee Concert celebrating the enactment of the Emancipation Proclamation. Two years later, H+H performed at the memorial service for Abraham Lincoln.

Today, H+H's Orchestra and Chorus delight more than 50,000 listeners annually with a nine-week subscription series at Symphony Hall and other leading venues. Through the Karen S. and George D. Levy Education Program, H+H supports seven youth choirs of singers in grades 2-12, and provides thousands of complimentary tickets to students and communities throughout Boston, ensuring the joy of music is accessible to all.

H+H's numerous free community concerts include an annual commemoration of the original 1863 Emancipation Proclamation concert on December 31 of every year, in collaboration with the Museum of African American History.

The artistic director of the Handel and Haydn Society is Harry Christophers, who is also founding artistic director of The Sixteen in London. Under Christophers’s leadership, H+H has released 15 CDs on the Coro label and has toured nationally and internationally.

In all these ways, H+H fulfills its mission to inspire the intellect, touch the heart, elevate the soul, and connect all of us with our shared humanity through transformative experiences with Baroque and Classical music.
