MOZART, CPE BACH, AND FRIENDS

March 21 + 23, 2021

HANDEL+HAYDN SOCIETY
The program reflects the variety of influences, styles, and functions of instrumental music in Europe. In the Avison Concerto grosso No. 5, we hear a work influenced by the keyboard music of Domenico Scarlatti, a contemporary of J.S. Bach. In the music of Boyce, C.P.E. Bach, and Mozart, aspects of an earlier style are referenced within the context of the whole.

Concerto Grosso No. 5 in D Minor, after Scarlatti
Charles Avison (1709-1770)

Charles Burney, the music chronicler and contemporary of Avison, described the composer as “an ingenious and polished man, esteemed and respected by all who knew him; and an elegant writer upon his art.”

Although he had been offered positions in other cities, Avison chose to spend his life and focus his musical activities in Newcastle upon Tyne in England. He was organist at St. Nicholas's Church and Director of the Newcastle Music Society, for which he organized subscription concerts beginning in 1735. Avison also helped to organize other musical and theatrical events in the area, coordinating performance days to avoid conflicts.

Avison studied with the Italian violinist and composer Francesco Geminiani, who had moved to England in 1714 and whose music was influenced by his teacher, Arcangelo Corelli. Avison’s set of concertos “after Scarlatti,” as well as another set of twelve based on the music of Geminiani make clear the composer’s preference for Italian musical models, a view he expounded on in his popular and controversial book, An Essay on Musical Expression in which he claimed Geminiani to be a better composer than Handel.

Each of the four movements of Avison’s Concerto Grosso No. 5 in D Minor conveys a distinctive mood, but all are also connected through a common rhythmic vitality. Drawing inspiration from different Scarlatti sonatas for each of its movements, Avison re-imagines the original within the context of a string ensemble, placing most of Scarlatti’s original right-hand figuration in the violins and transforming repeated motives into opportunities for interchanges between the soloists and full ensemble.

This program is made possible in part by the generous support of Glenn and Faith Parker.

Performing parts for the C.P.E Bach Symphony based on the critical edition Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach: The Complete Works (www.cpebach.org) were made available by the publisher, the Packard Humanities Institute of Los Altos, California. was a new position as court organist available in addition to his former post as concertmaster. After traveling to Munich in 1780 to fulfill another opera commission, Mozart left the archbishop’s court in June 1781 and stayed in Vienna for the last ten years of his life.

Of the numerous works Mozart wrote in the 1770s, including masses, concertos, operas, and symphonies, the 17 Epistle Sonatas are probably not the most well-known. Composed between 1772 and 1780 and sometimes called Organ Sonatas, many of these one-movement works reflect multiple styles and influences, from concerto to symphony as well as the more traditional sounds befitting their use in a church service. Many of the sonatas recall the Baroque trio sonata texture of two violins interweaving over a bassline; three sonatas are scored for a larger ensemble, including winds, brass, and percussion.

Part of a Roman Catholic tradition dating back to at least the 17th century which calls for instrumental music to supplement the sung portions of the Mass, the exact placement of Mozart’s Epistle Sonatas within the service remains something of an open question. What can be said with certainty is that a sonata was played before the Offertory and most likely before or after the reading of the Epistle, the second New Testament reading in the Roman Rite. A particular sonata was probably paired with the setting of the Ordinary texts (Kyrie, Gloria, Credo, Sanctus/Benedictus, Agnus Dei) by key and instrumentation.

Both sonatas on today’s program open with sharply articulated rhythmic and melodic ideas. The opening of Sonata No. 10 in F Major, composed in April 1776, commands our attention with a downward-leaping figure—an octave—played in the first violin followed by three more iterations of the same note. Mozart then re-interprets this gesture using four repeated notes without the initial leap. Both versions of this bold and easily recognizable idea return throughout the sonata, establishing harmonies and imbuing the whole with a vibrant energy.

The rhythmic gesture that opens Sonata No. 15 in C Major, composed in 1779, is equally distinctive, and within moments of this stable opening Mozart uses the same rhythmic figure to introduce a momentary sense of harmonic instability before plunging into a new idea firmly rooted in C major. The dynamic contrast and harmonic fluidity of this opening suffuses the entire sonata in which the violin parts sound more independent and purposeful. With the second half of the movement Mozart unleashes the latent energy that has been building. Here the first violin line plays wide, ascending leaps answered by a line that quickly plummets. All this tension is released as the opening music returns, only to build once again, now to a triumphant finish.

The organ part for both the Sonata in C and the Sonata in F is fully realized. In other words, the full organ part is written out by the composer. This differs from the organ part in some of the other Epistle Sonatas; for these Mozart only provided the bass line and a short-hand notation (figures), similar to the keyboard element in a Baroque basso continuo.

Symphony in C Major, Wq.182/3
Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach (1714-1788)

C.P.E. Bach’s own influences were wide-ranging and included his father, Johann Sebastian Bach, but ultimately Emanuel developed his own compositional style, especially during his thirty-years of service to the court of Frederick the Great of Prussia. He left the Berlin court in 1768 to accept a position in Hamburg—a post once held by his godfather Georg Philipp Telemann and analogous to the position his father had held in Leipzig.

Bach’s Sinfonia in C Major is one of six symphonies for strings commissioned by Baron Gottfried van Swieten, who encountered the composer’s music when he served as an ambassador to the Berlin court in the 1770s. Although the two probably never met in person, van Swieten became a staunch supporter of Bach’s music. The only instruction with this commission was that Bach should write the music as he wished, resulting in works that were praised by a contemporary for their “original and bold flow of ideas.”

The unison opening of the Allegro assai is assertive and the distinctive rhythm at the start of this movement acts as a unifying feature, despite the surprises that soon emerge. The first occurs when Bach breaks the rhythmic and harmonic momentum by moving to an unexpected note and then simply stopping. Quickly establishing and thwarting a pattern like this leaves the listener poised for other twists and turns, which Bach is happy to provide.

Bach then uses the predominant rhythmic motive of the first movement to plunge into the Adagio without any break. In this second movement the shades of light and dark are created through dynamic contrast and chromatic lines that seem to slide into place. Bach permeates the final movement, Allegretto, with a graceful, dance-like figure.

Symphony No. 1 in B-flat Major
William Boyce (1711-1779)

Boyce’s father said he noticed his son’s “delight in musical sounds” even when William was an infant; however, the composer’s remarkable career began when he was admitted to the music school associated with St. Paul’s Cathedral, where he studied with the organist, Maurice Greene. Although Boyce experienced the onset of hearing loss as a young man, he continued to compose and work as an organist. In 1736, he was appointed as a Composer to the Chapel Royal. Boyce was named Master of the King’s Musick in 1755, succeeding Greene, his lifelong friend and mentor.

Already known for his songs, in the 1740s Boyce’s fame reached new heights, beginning with the Dublin premiere of his cantata-like piece, Solomon, and continued with his vocal and instrumental music. Boyce wrote music for the church, court, and theater will equal ease, including about 50 odes in celebration of the new year or royal birthdays. His Symphony No. 1 in B-flat Major was originally the overture to an Ode for the New Year. Published in 1760, this symphony, in three movements, illustrates Boyce’s skilful craftsmanship, unfaltering sense of expression, and his belief that “the skill of the artist is best shewn, not in departing from the original key, but in keeping within it, and producing, ... all that variety of harmony of which it may be capable.”

THE WORLD BEYOND

1721 The Treaty of Nystad, ending hostilities between the Swedish Empire and the Tsardom of Russia, cedes Swedish Estonia and Livonia (present-day Latvia) to Peter the Great, who then establishes the Russian Empire.

1737 Francis Hopkinson is born in Philadelphia. A signer of the Declaration of Independence, designer of the first U.S. coin, and composer, Hopkinson claimed to be the “first native of United States who has produced a Musical Composition” with his Seven Songs for the Harpsichord or Forte Piano of 1788, which were dedicated to George Washington.

1759 Din Muhammad (Sake Dean Mahomed) is born in Patna, India, then part of the British Empire. Trained as a surgeon in the army, Mahomed’s 1794 book, The Travels of Dean Mahomet, is the first book by an Indian author published in England. He opens the first Indian restaurant in Central London in 1810. His “Indian Medicated Vapour Bath” becomes a medically recognized treatment for conditions such as arthritis.

1769 Spanish colonizers and missionaries led by Gaspar de Portolà arrive in Ohlone territory, present-day Monterey, California.

1776 John Gloucester, the first African American Presbyterian minister in America and the founder of The First African American Presbyterian Church (Philadelphia), is born into slavery in Tennessee. In 1806, Gloucester becomes the first African American to attend and graduate from Greenville College (today Tusculum University).

1776 Considered one of the first women in America to run an independent business, Margaret Green Draper, publisher of the Boston News-Letter, evacuates the city of Boston on March 17 with other Loyalists and British troops.

1784 Launching on Washington’s birthday, Empress of China, also called the Chinese Queen, is the first merchant ship to sail to China under a U.S. flag.

1788 After his death on December 14, C.P.E. Bach’s widow, Johanna Maria, and daughter, Anna Carolina Philippina, continue the “family business” of music publishing.

INSTRUMENT SPOTLIGHT
THE VIOLA

Larger than the violin and tuned a fifth below it, the viola is traditionally thought of as the “instrument of the middle.” In the 16th century, the word “viola” refers to a wide variety of string instruments; the word is later qualified to indicate specific types of instruments, such as viola da braczo (an instrument from the violin family held with the arms). By the 18th century, the name is generally shortened to “viola.”

The viola is prized for its rich and warm tones. An important part of ensemble music in the 16th and 17th centuries, it is not generally featured as a solo instrument. This continues into the early 18th century, excepting a few notable examples, including the Telemann Viola Concerto and two of the six Bach Brandenburg Concertos. Later in the century, however, the viola gains prominence as a solo instrument. Mozart—a violist as well as violinist—added a second viola part in composing his string quintets and made the viola an equal partner with the violin in his Sinfonia Concertante for violin and viola, K. 364.

ABOUT THE HANDEL AND HAYDN SOCIETY

Boston's Handel and Haydn Society performs Baroque and Classical music with a freshness, a vitality, and a creativity that inspires all ages. H+H has been captivating audiences for 206 consecutive seasons (the most of any performing arts organization in the United States) speaking to its success at converting new audiences to this extraordinary music, generation after generation.

H+H performed the “Hallelujah” chorus from Handel’s Messiah in its first concert in 1815, gave the American premiere in 1818, and ever since has been both a musical and a civic leader in the Boston community. During the Civil War, H+H gave numerous concerts in support of the Union Army (H+H member Julia Ward Howe wrote “The Battle Hymn of the Republic”) and on January 1, 1863, H+H performed at the Grand Jubilee Concert celebrating the enactment of the Emancipation Proclamation. Two years later, H+H performed at the memorial service for Abraham Lincoln.

Today, H+H’s Orchestra and Chorus delight more than 50,000 listeners annually with a nine-week subscription series at Symphony Hall and other leading venues. Through the Karen S. and George D. Levy Education Program, H+H supports seven youth choirs of singers in grades 2-12, and provides thousands of complimentary tickets to students and communities throughout Boston, ensuring the joy of music is accessible to all.

H+H’s numerous free community concerts include an annual commemoration of the original 1863 Emancipation Proclamation concert on December 31 of every year, in collaboration with the Museum of African American History.

The artistic director of the Handel and Haydn Society is Harry Christophers, who is also founding artistic director of The Sixteen in London. Under Christophers’s leadership, H+H has released 15 CDs on the Coro label and has toured nationally and internationally.

In all these ways, H+H fulfills its mission to inspire the intellect, touch the heart, elevate the soul, and connect all of us with our shared humanity through transformative experiences with Baroque and Classical music.
