PROGRAM NOTES
UNIQUELY THEIR OWN

Both works on today’s program, Saint-Georges’ Violin Concerto in G Major, Op. 2, No. 1 and Haydn’s Symphony No. 43, are being performed by H+H for the first time, almost 250 years after these works were premiered. The musical language of each piece is rooted in the latter part of the 18th century, yet each composition bears the unmistakable sound of its composer.

Violin Concerto in G Major, Op. 2, No. 1

The first time Joseph Bologne went to France, he was only two years old. Born in Guadeloupe, Joseph and his enslaved mother, Nanon, were threatened with being sold because George Bologne, his father, a plantation owner, was accused of a murder he did not commit. The three returned to Guadeloupe in 1749, after George received a full pardon.

In the 1750s, Saint-Georges and his parents returned to France, where his father’s rise to the nobility secured Joseph more opportunities. Joseph studied with the fencing master La Boëssière, and established his reputation when, as a student, he defeated another fencing master who had called him “La Boëssière’s upstart mulatto.” His father rewarded this victory with the gift of a horse and buggy.

Joseph’s father returned to his plantation in Guadeloupe, leaving his son, now a chevalier, in France with a substantial annual income. Saint-Georges continued to fence, being called the “finest swordsmen in Europe” and established himself as a violinist and composer, publishing most of his instrumental compositions, including twelve violin concertos, ten symphonies, and two sets of string quartets, in the 1770s. He also earned the dubious reputation as a kind of Don Juan in Parisian society.

Saint-Georges joined the newly formed Concert des Amateurs in 1769. Three years later he made his solo début with this orchestra, playing his Opus 2 Violin Concertos, and the next year became its music director. Under his guidance the ensemble was known as one of the finest in Europe.

Saint-Georges’ proposed appointment as music director of the Paris Opéra ended in 1776 when four prominent female singers successfully petitioned Queen Marie Antoinette to oppose the appointment. They argued that “their honor and delicate conscience” would be compromised if they had to “submit to the orders of a mulatto.” Despite this, Saint-Georges turned to opera composition, and in 1780 became the music director for the private theater of Madame de Montesson, the second wife of the Duke of Orléans.

With the dissolution of the Concert des Amateurs, Saint-Georges founded a new orchestra in 1781, the Concert de la Loge Olympique. After the death of the Duke of Orléans in 1785, Saint-Georges lost his position there; however, performances by his Concert de la Loge Olympique were increasingly popular and the group commissioned a set of six symphonies from Joseph Haydn. Saint-Georges also traveled to London as a fencing master, one contest being captured in a painting by Abbé Alexandre-Auguste Robineau.

Saint-Georges was made colonel of the Légion des Américains et du Midi in 1792; the next year he was imprisoned for 18 months during the Reign of Terror. After his release, he made a dangerous trip in 1795 to Saint-Domingue at the height of the revolution there. Two years later, Saint-Georges returned to Paris and led another orchestra, the Cercle de l’Harmonie, taking its artistic reputation to new heights before his death in 1799.

The solo part of the Violin Concerto in G Major, Op. 2, No. 1 speaks to Saint-Georges’ prowess as a performer as well as a composer. In the first movement, Allegro, a lyrically playful, rising first idea blossoms into a transition that moves into a new theme that features a repeated descending pattern. All of this is part of the preparation for the entrance of the soloist, particularly the long-held notes in the lower strings just before the soloist enters. These pedal tones will return later, rounding out this movement as well as offering the soloist one more opportunity to show the instrument’s highest and lowest reaches. Saint-Georges masterfully uses this virtuosic effect throughout this concerto, just one way in which the solo part extends the music initially presented by the full ensemble.

Symphony No. 43 in E-flat Major, Mercury

Joseph Haydn began singing in the church choir at Hainburg at the age of six and within two years was a member of the choir at St. Stephen’s in Vienna. By age 18, he was living in Vienna as a freelance musician, making his living as a music teacher and performer. Equally important, he was studying counterpoint and writing his first compositions. Although later in life Haydn said that he learned “the true fundamentals of composition” working for the Italian composer Nicola Porpora, he also studied counterpoint and the music of other composers, such as Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach, on his own. In addition, his compositions were getting noticed by the aristocracy; a series of recommendations resulted in Haydn, now in his mid-twenties, being appointed Kapellmeister for Count Morzin. When the count disbanded his small music ensemble a few years later due to financial constraints, the 29-year-old Haydn was hired by the Esterházy family, one of the wealthiest and most influential families in the Austrian empire.

Prince Nikolaus, head of the family for most of Haydn’s tenure, died in 1790 and his successor disbanded the court orchestra. Soon after this, the violinist and entrepreneur Johann Peter Salomon invited Haydn to England. Because this first trip was so successful, a second tour was arranged for 1794-1795. After returning to Vienna, Haydn wrote vocal music, including masses for the Esterházy family as well as The Creation and The Seasons before his death in 1809.
THE WORLD BEYOND IN 1772

The 17th Mughal Emperor of India returns to Delhi after 15 years in exile. Shah Alam II also wrote a collection of poems and one of the first prose books in Urdu.

Samuel Adams of Massachusetts proposes the Committee of Correspondence, a group made up of representatives from the American colonies concerned about the colonies' relationship with Great Britain. About this same time, John Singleton Copley, who is loyal to Britain, paints the portrait of Adams now a part of the collection at the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston.

The Watauga Association is formed in what is now Elizabethon, Tennessee by a group of settlers. This is considered the first independent government in colonial North America, which the British governor of Virginia called a "dangerous example."

Lord Mansfield, the Lord Chief Justice of England and Wales, rules on the case of Somerset v Stewart, declaring that an enslaved person cannot be forcibly removed from the country.

James Cook begins his second voyage to discover if there is any large land mass further south than New Zealand. The HMS Resolution reaches the Antarctic Circle the following year; the voyage dispels the idea of a large southern land mass or Terra Australia.

Mount Papandayan in West Java erupts and the northeast flank of the volcano collapses. Since then, the volcano has erupted three more times, the most recent in 2002.

After two years, the bubonic plague outbreak that killed about one-third of the Moscow population begins to subside and government offices reopen after being closed for 15 months.

Mission San Luis Obispo de Tolosa is founded by Father Junípero Serra in San Luis Obispo, California.

Basque explorer Domingo de Bonechea, a captain in the Spanish Royal Navy, makes his first expedition to Tahiti.

Margaret Cochran marries John Corbin in Pennsylvania and joins her husband when he enlists in the militia. During the Battle of Fort Washington, she dons a uniform and helps her husband fire cannons, taking over when he is killed. For her service, she is given a military pension—one half the sum given to men.

Joseph Bologne, Chevalier de Saint-Georges

Fencing match between Saint-Georges and the Chevalier d’Eon at the Carlton house, London, on April 9, 1787 by Alexandre-Auguste Robineau (1747-1828). The Chevalier d’Eon was a French diplomat and spy who presented as female for the last 33 years of her life.

Engraving from 1789 depicting a fictional sparring match between Saint-Georges and George Hanger, 4th Baron Coleraine. Also depicted, on the left, are the Chevalier d’Eon and the Prince of Wales.

TWO LIVES IN MUSIC: JOSEPH BOLOGNE, CHEVALIER DE SAINT-GEORGES + JOSEPH HAYDN

JOSEPH BOLOGNE, CHEVALIER DE SAINT-GEORGES

1685 Code noir, a set of laws that define the use of slave labor in the French colonies, is ratified during the reign of Louis XIV.

1716 The Edict of October 1716 allows French colonists and military personnel to bring enslaved members of their household to France. The visit can only be temporary and for a specific reason. The colonist must obtain permission to travel and register any enslaved travelers by name in advance. If they fail to comply, once in France, the enslaved person is free.

1738 The Declaration of 1738 modifies the Edict of 1716 in two ways:
• an enslaved person may stay in France up to 3 years
• if the colonist does not comply with the rules of Edict, the enslaved person must return to the colonies.

1745 Joseph Bologne is born in Guadeloupe. His father, George, is a French plantation owner and his mother, Nanon, is an enslaved woman.

1755 George, Nanon, and Joseph move to Paris, which does not recognize the Declaration of 1738.

1764 Joseph becomes a Gendarme de la Garde du Roi (Master of the King’s Guard) and is given the title chevalier (knight).

1769 Saint-Georges joins a new orchestra in Paris, the Concert des Amateurs. Three years later he makes his debut as a soloist, playing his Violin Concertos, Op. 2.

1774 After his father’s death, Saint-Georges supports himself as a professional musician.

1776 Louis XVI nationalizes the Paris Opéra after Saint-Georges’ appointment as music director is thwarted by four leading female singers who refuse to work with “a mulatto.”

1780s The Caribbean colonies supply almost half of the West’s demand for coffee and sugar.

1780-1785 Saint-Georges is music director for the private theater of Madame de Montesson, the second wife of the Duke of Orléans.

1781 Saint-Georges is a founding member and leader of the Concert de la Loge Olympique, an orchestra that will commission six symphonies from Haydn in the 1780s.

1791 Enslaved Africans attack plantation buildings in the French colony of Saint Domingue. After defeating both French and British forces, in 1804, the colony declares its independence as the Republic of Haiti and abolishes slavery.

1795 Saint-Georges travels to Saint Domingue at the height of the revolution there.

1797 Saint-Georges leads the Cercle de l’Harmonie, an orchestra which gains a reputation for the beauty of its performances.

1812 Faubourg Tremé, the oldest African-American neighborhood in the United States, is established in New Orleans. Many of the original inhabitants of this neighborhood arrive from Haiti after the revolution of 1791.

JOSEPH HAYDN

1732 Joseph Haydn is born in Rohrau, Lower Austria. His father is a wheelwright and town official.

1738 Haydn sings in the chapel choir, first at Hainberg, then at St. Stephen’s in Vienna.

1750 Haydn, about 18 years old, is dismissed from St. Stephen’s. He stays in Vienna working as a freelance musician and teacher.

1759 Haydn is appointed Kapellmeister (director of music) for Count Morzin in Vienna.

1761 Haydn is named assistant Kapellmeister, and later Kapellmeister, for Prince Esterházy. Haydn will remain active in this position until 1790 (the death of Prince Nikolaus), when he still composes for the family, but has no formal duties.

1762 Nikolaus Esterházy becomes prince; he begins transforming his favorite hunting lodge in Hungary (named Sütőr) into a palace of 126 rooms plus surrounding buildings and grounds, called Eszterháza.

1768 The opera house at Eszterháza opens with a production of Haydn’s Lo speziale.

1771 Haydn publishes his String Quartets, Op. 20, “The Sun.”

1772 Haydn composes Symphony No. 43 in E-flat Major no later than 1772.

1786 Saint-Georges leads the premiere of Haydn’s “Paris” Symphonies, commissioned on behalf of the Concert de la Loge Olympique.

1791-92 Haydn’s first trip to London for concerts sponsored by the impresario Johann Peter Salomon. Haydn will teach Beethoven in Vienna after this trip.

1794-95 Haydn makes his second London trip.

1809 Haydn dies in Vienna on May 31. Mozart’s Requiem is played at his memorial service.

About the Handel and Haydn Society

The artistic director of the Handel and Haydn Society is Harry Christophers, who is also founding artistic director of The Sixteen in London. Under Christophers’s leadership, H+H has released 15 CDs on the Coro label and has toured nationally and internationally.

In all these ways, H+H fulfills its mission to inspire the intellect, touch the heart, elevate the soul, and connect all of us with our shared humanity through transformative experiences with Baroque and Classical music.
