THE MARRIAGE OF FIGARO

Nov 17 + 18, 2022

HANDEL+HAYDN SOCIETY
Thank you so much for joining us for Mozart’s masterpiece of comic opera, in its first-ever complete H+H production with a cast drawn from the great opera houses of the world. As impressive as this Marriage of Figaro may be, though, it’s also a good time to remember that this is just one part of the difference H+H makes to Boston.

Quietly, away from the glamour of Symphony Hall, every week H+H is turning more than 900 Boston schoolchildren on to the magic of music. That’s right—on any given day you’ll find H+H teaching artists in any of six Boston elementary schools teaching students ages 3-12 how to sing, play, and read music. Sometimes musicians from the H+H Orchestra and Chorus even stop by! H+H is teaching music in Brighton, Dorchester, Roxbury, South Boston, and the South End. And the great thing is, H+H’s music program is growing—nearly double in size in the last two years.

Studies prove that arts education positively impacts all aspects of a child’s learning, and this is more pronounced for students in under-resourced communities. The Brookings Institution found that “increases in learning positively and significantly affect students’ school engagement, college aspirations, and their inclinations to draw upon works of art as a means for empathizing with others.” Through their music classes with H+H, Boston’s children build their music literacy skills, engage in joyful expression and connection with each other, grow their self-confidence and leadership skills, experience cultural affirmation, broaden their understanding of the world, and create opportunities for gathering within our community.

All credit goes to our inspiring team of teaching artists: Carlos Azarnez, Kelsey Blackstone, Rachael Chagat, Jeannette Lee, Laura Nevitt, and Kevin Virgilio under the leadership of VP of Education Emily Reed. And of course our funders, most notably EdVestors, Liberty Mutual Foundation, Ramsey McCluskey Family Foundation, and Van Otterloo Family Foundation; and two endowed funds supporting the program: the Remsen M. and Joan G. Kinne Endowed Fund for Music Education and the Ronald Woodward Education Fund.

I’m guessing most everyone at Symphony Hall today—onstage and in the audience—is here because they fell in love with music as a child. Thanks to these funders and many more like them, the audience and the performers of the future are on the way.

With gratitude,

David Snead

THE HANDEL AND HAYDN SOCIETY

Boston’s Grammy-winning Handel and Haydn Society performs Baroque and Classical music with a freshness, a vitality, and a creativity that inspires all ages. H+H has been captivating audiences for 208 consecutive seasons (the most of any performing arts organization in the United States), speaking to its singular success at converting new audiences to this extraordinary music, generation after generation.

H+H performed the “Hallelujah” chorus from Handel’s Messiah in its first concert in 1815, gave the American premiere in 1818, and ever since has been both a musical and a civic leader in the Boston community. During the Civil War, H+H gave numerous concerts in support of the Union Army (H+H member Julia Ward Howe wrote “The Battle Hymn of the Republic”) and on January 1, 1863, H+H performed at the Grand Jubilee Concert celebrating the enactment of the Emancipation Proclamation. Two years later, H+H performed at the memorial service for Abraham Lincoln.

Today, H+H’s Orchestra and Chorus delight more than 50,000 listeners annually with a nine-week subscription series at Symphony Hall and other leading venues. Through the Karen S. and George D. Levy Education Program, H+H supports seven youth choirs of singers in grades 2–12, and provides thousands of complimentary tickets to students and communities throughout Boston, ensuring the joy of music is accessible to all. H+H’s numerous free community concerts include an annual commemoration of the original 1863 Emancipation Proclamation concert on December 31 of every year, in collaboration with the Museum of African American History. H+H has released 16 CDs on the CORO label and has toured nationally and internationally. In all these ways, H+H fulfills its mission to inspire the intellect, touch the heart, elevate the soul, and connect all of us with our shared humanity through transformative experiences with Baroque and Classical music.

SYNOPSIS

Act I. Figaro, valet to Count Almaviva, is to be married to Susanna, Countess Rosina’s maid. Susanna warns Figaro that the Count’s motives in offering them a new room next to his may not be entirely innocent. After Susanna is called away, Figaro promises to get the better of the Count.

Dr. Bartolo and Marcellina enter. Marcellina says Figaro owes her money and promised to marry her in lieu of repayment. Bartolo offers to help her. After Bartolo leaves, Susanna returns and the two women bicker. Next, Cherubino asks for Susanna’s help because the Count caught him with Barbarina. When the Count enters, Cherubino hides behind a chair. The Count tries to seduce Susanna, and, as she resists, Basilio arrives. The Count hides behind the chair as Cherubino slips under a cloth on the seat. When Basilio announces that Cherubino is in love with the Countess, the Count reveals himself. When Cherubino is revealed, the angry Count sends Cherubino to the army.

Act 2. The Countess is sad about her husband’s behavior. Figaro suggests that Cherubino, disguised as a woman, expose the Count’s infidelity. Cherubino enters, and while Susanna is in another room, the Count returns. Cherubino hides in a closet, locking it from the inside. When the Count hears noises, the Countess says it is Susanna. After the Count, followed by the Countess, leaves to find tools to open the closet, Susanna and Cherubino emerge. Cherubino escapes out the window while Susanna hides in the closet. When the Count and Countess return, she admits that Cherubino is hiding. The Count opens the closet to find Susanna. The Countess, as surprised as the Count, claims this was a test of his trust.

The Count asks forgiveness but also wants to know about a letter he received. Susanna and the Countess explain that it was sent by Figaro, and when Figaro enters, the Count questions him. The Count’s suspicions are aroused again when Antonio, the gardener, says Cherubino jumped out of the Countess’s window. Figaro claims it was him and, with the help of Susanna and the Countess, identifies a document (Cheubino’s military orders) dropped during the escape. Now Marcellina and Bartolo enter demanding Figaro make good on his debt, and the Count refuses to allow Figaro’s wedding to proceed until this issue is resolved.

Act 3. As the Count reflects, Susanna enters and promises to meet him that night. The Count, however, realizes he is being tricked and vows to force Figaro to marry Marcellina. At the trial Don Curzio rules in Marcellina’s favor. Figaro says he cannot pay, and cannot marry without his parents’ permission. In a startling revelation, all learn that Figaro is the lost son of Marcellina and Bartolo. Now there will be a double wedding!

Cherubino hides among a group serenading the Countess, but his identity is revealed. The Count is furious, but Barbarina reminds him that he promised her anything in return for her favors. Cherubino is allowed to stay.

Act 4. Figaro becomes jealous when he overhears Barbarina discussing Susanna’s rendezvous with the Count and asks Marcellina, Bartolo, and Basilio for guidance. Susanna and the Countess, dressed in each other’s clothing, and Marcellina enter. Susanna sings a love song to tease her husband, who is watching from a distance. Cherubino enters and sees the woman he believes is Susanna (the Countess). The Count sees Cherubino and, when he tries to hit him, strikes Figaro instead as Cherubino runs away. The Count now pursues “Susanna.” Figaro sees “the Countess” and starts to tell her about the Count’s infidelity when he realizes that it is Susanna. He admits that he recognized her voice, and the two are reunited. When the Count returns, Figaro again expresses his love for “the Countess.” Enraged, the Count calls for help, and all the characters, including the Countess (still disguised as Susanna), return.

Despite pleas for forgiveness, the Count is unyielding. When the Countess reveals her identity, the Count falls to his knees and begs forgiveness. The Countess forgives him, and all resolve to be happy.
Wolfgang Amadè Mozart wrote some 18 operas and other staged works over the course of his life. His first opera, Apollo et Hyacinthus, was composed when he was 11. Commissioned by a Salzburg school, it premiered in 1767 as part of an end-of-term production. The following year, his opera La finta semplice was proposed for a performance in Vienna; however, concerns about the quality of a piece composed by a child were immediately raised. Even though a private reading of the work convinced most of its worth, the director of opera in Vienna refused to allow the performance to move forward. Instead, the opera was premiered in Mozart’s hometown of Salzburg under the patronage of his father’s employer, the archbishop.

Mozart received a commission to compose Mitridate for the 1770–71 season in Milan. He wrote this opera, which lasted about six hours, in about five months. Again, doubts were raised about the ability of a 14-year-old to compose such a complex work, but all that changed after the first orchestral rehearsal, and the first performance was a resounding success with the public and the press. He composed other works for Milan, Salzburg, and Munich throughout the 1770s.

Mozart went to Munich in November 1780, for rehearsals of his new opera, Idomeneo, commissioned earlier that year. The premiere on January 29, 1781, for which his father and sister came from Salzburg, was a great success, and the opera was still being given in March when Mozart was summoned to Vienna by his Salzburg employer, Archbishop Colloredo, who was in the imperial city for the accession of Joseph II. The relationship between composer and his patron had been strained since 1778, when Mozart made an extended trip that included Mannheim and Paris while trying unsuccessfully to secure a position with another court. The success of his latest opera for Munich combined with the archbishop’s refusal to allow Mozart to accept offers to play at other aristocratic homes in Vienna, including for the new emperor, fueled Mozart’s hope of breaking with his Salzburg employer. In May 1781, Mozart’s resignation was refused; one month later, he was summarily dismissed. He lived in Vienna for the remainder of his life, returning to Salzburg only once.

His first years in Vienna were filled with composing, performing, and teaching. He began work on his next opera, Die Entführung aus dem Serail, in the summer of 1781. After being postponed, the work premiered one year later. Although Mozart was busier than ever, he never stopped looking for a new opera libretto. Between 1783 and 1785, he even wrote several numbers for two different operas, but both were left unfinished. He did complete a one-act comedy, Der Schauspieldirektor, which premiered at a private performance in 1786. Also during this time Mozart met court poet Lorenzo Da Ponte. Together the two artists would produce three operas: Le nozze di Figaro, Don Giovanni, and Così fan tutte.

Born Emmanuele Conegliano, Da Ponte’s name was changed after his father converted the family to Christianity. He was ordained a priest in 1773 and spent several years teaching in seminaries until he was banned from his hometown of Venice for his political views and associations with married women. With the recommendation of fellow librettist Caterino Mazzolà in hand, Da Ponte moved to Vienna in 1781 and was named poet to the court theater. After the death of Joseph II 10 years later, Da Ponte was dismissed from this post. He moved to Paris, then London, before crossing the Atlantic to the United States in 1805, where he became a merchant in New York and Pennsylvania. He also dealt in Italian-language books and taught privately; although mostly honorary, his appointments included Professor of Italian at Columbia College from the 1820s until his death in 1838.

For his first collaboration with Mozart, Da Ponte adapted the play La folle journée, ou Le mariage de Figaro (The Crazy Day, or The Marriage of Figaro), by Pierre-Augustin Caron de Beaumarchais, using a recently published German translation. One of a trilogy of plays, Figaro was banned as a stage work even though an operatic adaptation of the first play, Le barbier de Séville, ou La précaution inutile (The Barber of Séville or The Unnecessary Precaution), in 1784 was successful. This opera by Giovanni Paisiello was a model for Mozart’s work, which he began in the fall of 1785.

Today considered Mozart’s most popular opera, Le nozze di Figaro premiered on May 1, 1786; moderately successful, there were nine performances that year in Vienna. The next year’s performances in Prague proved more profitable, and Mozart credited the commission of his next project with Da Ponte, Don Giovanni, to the popularity of Figaro, writing that “Nothing is played, sung or whistled but Figaro! Nothing, nothing but Figaro! Certainly a great honor for me.”

The story of Le nozze di Figaro is a continuation of the first part of Beaumarchais’s trilogy in which the barber, Figaro, helps Count Almaviva marry Rosina. Now Figaro, the Count’s valet, is to be married to Susanna, the Countess Rosina’s maid. The opera opens with the duet “Cinque, dieci,” as Figaro measures a room for the couple’s new bed while Susanna tries on her wedding bonnet. This scene of domestic tranquility is disrupted, however, by events and complications yet to come. The first complication is raised by Susanna, who suspects that the Count’s motives in offering the new couple the room Figaro is measuring are not entirely innocent; the Count is known for his exploits. In “Se vuol ballare,” Figaro makes a decision: if the Count wants to “dance,” then it will be Figaro who “makes the music.” Here, Mozart defines Figaro’s character in two ways: the straightforward melody sung by Figaro is indicative of his position in the social hierarchy, while the pulse of a minuet (a dance associated with aristocrats) and a faster closing section suggest that Figaro will meet the threat posed by the Count on his own terms.

Another complication to the marriage emerges with the introduction of Marcellina and Dr. Bartolo. Marcellina claims that Figaro owes her money and has promised to marry her in lieu of repaying the debt. Bartolo is more than happy to help Marcellina with her claim; in the first Beaumarchais play, Figaro’s intervention on behalf of the Count prevented Bartolo from marrying Rosina.

The next scene begins with a musical conversation, a recitative, between Susanna and a new character, Cherubino. After Cherubino sings “Non so più,” a love song to all women and love itself, the situation becomes more convoluted with the entrance of several more characters. First, the Count tries to seduce Susanna with promises for Figaro’s future. As Susanna resists his advances, another character, Basilio, is heard in the distance; he has, in fact, seen the Count enter Susanna’s room and is determined to stir up trouble. Now the Count too is hiding as Basilio enters the room and announces that Cherubino is in love with the Countess. Outraged, the Count reveals himself and the beginning of a trio, “Cosa sento!” begins in which the Count fumes with an imposing, rising line as Susanna tries to divert the Count’s attention from Cherubino’s hiding place with quick patter and “fainting” spells, and Basilio sings a chromatic melody that slides down, belying his words (“I don’t want to make trouble”). Cherubino is eventually revealed, and the Count’s anger becomes focused anew. Figaro temporarily defuses this situation and delays the inevitable by bringing in a chorus of countryfolk who sing the Count’s praises (“Giovanni liete”). Mozart defines each character in this scene musically, allowing each to remain distinct even though all are singing simultaneously. While this complex scene for an ensemble of singers moves the action of the opera forward, it functions as a precursor for later scenes as well.

Act 2 introduces the Countess, who implores the god of love (“Porgi, Amor”) to restore her husband’s attention to her alone, and she pays close attention to Figaro’s and Susanna’s plan to make this happen. Cherubino, whom the Count banished, but Figaro secretly detained, will dress as Susanna, meet the Count, and expose his infidelity. The plan goes awry when the Count returns early from a hunting expedition, expecting to find Cherubino with the Countess. He finds Susanna instead and is forced to ask the Countess for forgiveness, even though other revelations come to light, including complaints from the gardener.
that someone jumped out of the Countess’s window. As with the earlier ensemble, nothing is resolved. This time, Marcellina, Basilio, and Bartolo enter demanding that Figaro make good on his debt.

A new plot to expose the Count’s infidelity is hatched between the Countess and Susanna; Susanna will agree to meet the Count that night, but the two women will exchange cloaks so that the Count won’t realize he is meeting his wife.

In Act 3, Marcellina’s complaint against Figaro goes to trial, where the presider, Don Curzio, rules in her favor. Figaro says he cannot pay the money, and further claims that he cannot marry without his parents’ permission. In a startling revelation, all learn that Figaro is actually the lost son of Marcellina and Bartolo! Their reconciliation and Susanna’s misinterpretation of their union as marriage, plus the frustration of the Count and Curzio is brilliantly set in the sextet “Riconosci in questo ampesello.”

Before the Countess sets her plans into motion, she sings the heartfelt aria “Dove sono,” (which bears striking similarities to the Agnus dei from Mozart’s “Coronation” Mass). Next, she has Susanna write a note to the Count to confirm their nocturnal meeting. In the finale of Act 3, Susanna gives the Count the note during the wedding celebrations.

In Act 4, Figaro becomes jealous when he overhears talk about Susanna’s planned rendezvous with the Count. Asking Basilio and Bartolo to act as witnesses to Susanna’s betrayal, Figaro becomes emotional in “Aprite un po’ quegl’occhi.” Under the cover of darkness, mistaken identities fuel the final scene as characters encounter or chase away one another. As the chaos reaches a high point, the Countess, who had been disguised as Susanna, reveals her true identity. Now, everything stops as the Count falls to his knees and, in a soaringly elegant and yet simple line, sings, “Contessa, perdono.” The Countess’s equally poignant response is the point of reconciliation for all who now sing with one voice for the first time.

In a story—made infamous by the film Amadeus—Joseph II is reported to have complained that Mozart used too many notes in Figaro, to which the composer replied he had used only those that were necessary. In fact, it was the success of the opera’s first performances and the call for the repetition of numerous numbers that instigated a ban on repeating any part of an opera except arias. Still, years later, audiences continue to relish these many notes that bring characters, situations, and the complexities of one “crazy day” to life.

THE MARRIAGE OF FIGARO:
AN OVERVIEW

Characters in order of appearance:

- Figaro, formerly a barber, now valet to Count Almaviva, and about to marry Susanna, maid to Countess Almaviva.
- Bartolo wanted to marry the Countess but now wants revenge on Figaro for helping the Count.
- Marcellina claims Figaro owes her money and that he promised to marry her if he could not pay.
- Cherubino, a page, whose actions mirror those of the Count, is caught in the rooms of another servant, Barbarina. Cherubino also expresses love for the Countess.
- Count Almaviva, who tries to seduce Susanna.
- Basilio, a singing teacher.
- Countess, married to Count Almaviva and aware that his affections lie elsewhere.
- Antonio, the gardener and Barbarina’s father.

The four acts of this opera are set within Count Almaviva’s palace and grounds, moving into progressively larger spaces.

The first act takes place in the more intimate setting of an unfurnished room that was promised to Figaro and Susanna when they are married. The room bustles with characters entering and leaving, until a chorus of countryfolk, led by Figaro and singing the Count’s praises, enter.

Act 2 is set in the Countess’s rooms, and in this private chamber more intrigues are set in motion, especially one in which the Count suspects that Cherubino is hiding in the Countess’s closet, but only Susanna emerges.

The setting for Act 3 is a large room prepared for a wedding. In this space the trial and reconciliation between Figaro and Marcellina is misunderstood by Susanna, foreshadowing events yet to come.

The palace garden at night provides the setting for Act 4, making the numerous encounters and mistaken identities possible. All becomes clear, however, when the Countess reveals her true identity.

Raphaël Pichon began in music with the violin, piano, and singing, training in various Parisian conservatories. In 2006 he founded Pygmalion, a choir and period-instrument orchestra, which quickly distinguished itself by the singularity of its projects, including Bach’s Missae Breves, late versions of Rameau’s lyrical tragedies, and Mozart rarities. Recent projects include Luigi Rossi’s Orfeo at the Opéra national de Lorraine and at the Opéra royal du Château de Versailles, the spatialization of Monteverdi’s Vespro della Beata Vergine, a cycle of artistic encounters around Bach’s cantatas at the Philharmonie de Paris, and Bach’s complete Motets and B-minor Mass. Invited to the Festival d’Aix-en-Provence in 2018 to conduct The Magic Flute, Mr. Pichon returned in 2019 for a scenic creation of Mozart’s Requiem. As a guest conductor, he has led the Mozarteum Orchestra at the Salzburg Festival, the Deutsches Symphonie-Orchester, Violons du Roy de Québec, and the Freiburger Barockorchester. Jacquelyn Stucker, soprano (Countess Almaviva)
Hailed by The Boston Globe as “glowing,” “incandescent,” and “a singing actress to be reckoned with,” American soprano Jacquelyn Stucker masters a broad ranging repertoire of concert works, recital, opera, and contemporary music. In summer 2022 she made a hugely impactful debut as Poppea in L’incoronazione di Poppea at the Festival d’Aix-en-Provence, which attracted universal praise, and has cemented her reputation as a true rising star. Engagements this season include returns to her alma mater, the Royal Opera House to debut Pamina in Die Zauberflöte, and to the Palau de les Arts Reina Sofia as Zerlina in Don Giovanni.
